HIDEOUS DIVA SHOCKS CROWD

By now, everybody is talking about Sally Boils and her debut performance at the New Years Gala Performance in Britain this past evening. The lamps were dimmed as the silhouetted figure entered the stage. The orchestra began to play, and was soon enjoined by the voice of an angel, whose billowy notes wafted all present listeners upon a cloud of ecstasy into the heavens away from the cares of the mortal world. Time seemed to stand still for those brief moments, until the lights on stage were again lit. Shrieks of terror rose from the crowd as they beheld the figure of Sally Boils on stage. The master of ceremonies worked quickly to calm the confused crowd and assure them that the angelic voice that they heard came from the revolting figure standing before them, and requested that Sally offer a second performance in full-lit view. She quietly requested a glass of water, which surprisingly didn't jump out of the glass before she could drink it. Then Sally began to sing the cake song.

The sheer beauty of her voice contrasted against her vile appearance was more of a paradox than most human brains could reconcile, and it is uncertain if many of those present will recover to be productive members of society in the future.
One thing is for certain,
as far as many Britains are concerned, she had better not show her ugly face around here.

NEW STUDY SHOWS
PASSIVE BOOK READING
ROTS BRAIN WHILE
ALCOHOL CONSUMPTION
STIMULATES BRAIN
FUNCTION.

Good news for drunkards today! An independent group of experimenters at the Serpent Cross Tavern subjected themselves to repeat trials of intoxication to determine whether the human brain improves in performance when challenged by alcohol, and they say that it does. Furthermore, the self-testers came to the conclusion that trying to read stuff like the tavern menu, only induced a state of confusion in the human brain and should be avoided in general. The group later departed the tavern in high spirits to share their findings with the academics in Moonglow, even if they had to wake them up in the middle of the night to share their discovery.

Good Morning Britannia!

We are the Rising Phoenix; a body of like-minded fellow travelers with one sole purpose in mind. We are individuals looking to ignite a spark within every searching man, woman and child in the land; bringing with it a new age where the old fossilized prejudices and ignorance fall away into ashes, giving birth to a rising new paradigm of possibilities and unrestricted growth.
Imagine! A new world waiting to be born, built by a people who have long sought to discard the old constructs of a rigid world that neither nourishes nor promotes a future for its people.
See, on the horizon, a future of prosperity and hope where all can envision themselves as a integral part of the grand design, projecting into a vast infinity of possibilities. We just need YOU! What we lack is a good starting point. If you have an idea on how we can begin this most worthy and grandiose of tasks, please contact us now. We will also accept funds in lieu of an awesome workable idea
that brings assured prosperity and hope to mankind. We will be placing drop boxes
throughout most cities.
Please feel free to drop in suggestions for the salvation of humanity.
Gold or checks all are also welcome. To a brighter future! Love, the Rising Phoenix.

[IN MEMORY]

Lord Kraken

Yew's own Porter "Lord Kraken" Thompson died January 3, 2011 and was remembered on the one year anniversary of his passing the his official memorial at "The Red & Purple Pixies of the Yew Wood" this past Tuesday. Kraken's mall, "The Yew Gate Mall of the Red & Purple" still has been held in trust since his retirement shortly before he passed away after a short and brutal fight with leukemia.

He is remembered by his long friend Lady Frany Flame, trustee of his mall. Porter is survived by his wife, daughter, and son who loved their father much and have offered many thanks for Porter being remembered in the game world he loved so much. Thanks to EM Bennu, his name will forever be remembered with his memorial.

Happy New Years from all of us here at Yew Times Staff!
